

Rena Bullock Elementary

Image from <https://vintageaerial.com/photos/north-carolina/guilford/1963/BGU/62/5>

Rena Bullock Elementary was a segregated school, serving black students in southeast Guilford county between 1950 and 1967. The property is abandoned and has not seen use for over 50 years.

The institution was universally loved by the student body. Previous student Vickie Goins recalled the school's annual May Day celebration where children wrapped ribbons around a pole in the school lawn.

Image from <http://www.herbin.com/renabullock.html>

The building is rundown and moldy from years of vacancy. Graffiti covers the walls; chunks of the ceiling cover the ground. Ever since the death of segregation, places like this are nothing but portals to the past.